Disorientation

STARTING AT $1.3 MILLION

ABOUT THIS PROPERTY

Welcome to the 270 square ft home that is open for sale. This out of the ordinary house is perched over 100 ft off the ground with a scenic view of the campus. The bidding process started in June, 2011 and the final product finished by September 19, 2011. The house is at a learned angle to portray the feeling of "crashing" into the Jacobs Engineering building on campus. This home was inspired by Suh Do Ho's experience from first living in Korea, then moving to what felt like a new world in America.

FEATURES

- ✓ Blend of Korean and American style home,
- ✓ Unique architecture with a leaning angle, different from other properties
- ✓ Inspiration from traditional "home like" models in order to capture the feeling of displacement
- ✓ Similar concept to a tornado crashing into a house like Mary Poppins

CONSTRUCTION NOTES

There were multiple mock up designs before the final product was constructed. Meetings were conducted with details of the timeline of the project. The original house was built to be 'crashing' into the side of the Jacob's Engineering building on campus, but due to the space and impracticality, the house was then positioned at the top corner.

THIS HOUSE IS PERFECT FOR:

Those that feel like they do not belong, especially navigating a new environment. You can become emerged in a unique house that aids students in finding their identity while discovering a new place. Ideal for students who travel a far distance from their home town to attend UCSD. Suh Do Ho intended for the house to blur the lines between feeling displaced and home. Be apart of this message and live in a home built on the diverse experiences of students.
